Pioneering Deans Of Women More Than Wise And Pious Matrons

Their names, rightly, are said to "immediately come to mind" in this connection, although in the opening paragraph, the authors states, too strongly, that "one finds very few, if any, women mentioned in the standard texts on the history of this field." It then moves on to other, less well known women. The paper fulfills its goals, and can be highly recommended.

Pioneering women in computer science

The pipeline shrinkage problem for women in computer science is a well-known and documented phenomenon where the ratio of women to men involved in computing shrinks dramatically from early student years to working years [19, 22, 23, 32, 42, 93, 112], ...
